my boat, and made a sail to it out of some pieces of the ship's sail, of which I had a great stock by me.

Having fitted my mast and sail and tried the boat, I found she would sail very well. Then I made little lockers, or boxes, at either end of my boat to put provisions and ammunition into, to be kept dry; and a little long hollow place I cut in the inside of the boat, where I could lay my gun.

I fixed my umbrella also at the stern, to stand over my head and keep the heat of the sun off me; and thus I took every now and then a little voyage upon the sea. At last I resolve^' upon my tour; and accordingly I victuafledjray ship for the voyage, putting in two dozen of my loaves of barley bread, an burthen pot full of rice, half a goat, and raowder and shot for killing more, and two
